Dear Norman,

I regret that you interpret my emails as containing personal attacks. While you may not agree with my view of the facts, my emails are factual, and you have not refuted the facts. Feel free to point out to me what you regard as being personal attacks. There are none, as I see it.

Jim

Mr. Kennedy,

I am in an out of town deposition all day today and will not be responding to your email in the time frame requested (if at all). I will note that once again your email consists largely of misstatements and personal attacks and I request (not for the first time) that to the extent that you wish to communicate with me, you do so in a professional manner.
